The authors included in this issue all participated in the 2013 GASC at UCLA, although not all their texts are taken from their conference presentations. All are seasoned contributors to Anthropoetics, to which they have now contributed a total of 29 articles. Their contributions range from the political (Chris Fleming-John O'Carroll's essay on "Revolution") to the religio-political (Dawn Perlmutter's article on Islamist symbolism) and the literary (Marina Ludwigs' analysis of the "Janus" function in narrative) to the philosophical (Raphael Foshay's study of GA's and Heidegger's readings of classical philosophy, and Edmond Wright's rich essay on the epistemology of faith, which offers many parallels with GA's analyses).

Let me take this final opportunity to thank Stacey Meeker and Ian Dennis for their painstaking editorial work, which covered both this and the previous issue (19, 1). I think all the authors in this volume appreciated their skill and conscientiousness.

About Our Contributors

Chris Fleming is Senior Lecturer in the School of Humanities and Communication Arts at the University of Western Sydney, Australia. He is the author of Rene Girard: Violence and Mimesis and one of the editors of the Bloomsbury series, Violence, Desire and the Sacred.
