As our readers are aware, René Girard passed away last November shortly before his 92nd birthday. The present issue was conceived as a modest memorial to him. All the articles in this issue pay tribute in one way or another to René Girard, who was my teacher and whom I consider the honorary founder of Generative Anthropology.

About Our Contributors

Ben Barber is a PhD student in the Department of English at the University of Ottawa, where he holds a Canadian Social Science and Humanities Research Scholarship for his research on the influence of Shakespeare's representations of mimetic desire upon the poetic vision of Lord Byron. In 2012 he received an MA in English from the University of Victoria, where his research focused on honor and mimetic rivalry in early modern drama.

Andrew Bartlett has been teaching academic writing as a member of the English Department at Kwantlen Polytechnic University in Surrey, British Columbia (a suburb of Vancouver) since 1998. His book Mad Scientist, Impossible Human: An Essay in Generative Anthropology (Davies Group Publishers) appeared in 2014 and is available on Amazon.com. He has presented papers at annual meetings of the Colloquium on Violence and Religion and at GASC (the Generative Anthropology Society and Conference). From 2009 to 2014, he was President of the GASC. His current research is trying to negotiate between the originary hypothesis, creation theology, and human-animal studies.

Thomas F. Bertonneau teaches English at SUNY Oswego. He is a regular contributor to Modern Age, Intercollegiate Review, and The University Bookman, as well as to Praesidium and Anthropoetics. His "Karen Blixen and the Apocalypse of Man" will appear in the forthcoming (Spring) number of Modern Age; his article on "Sacrifice and Sainthood: The Short Fiction of Walter M. Miller in Context" is forthcoming in Science Fiction Studies. Bertonneau has contributed a study of Walter Pater to Adam Katz's anthology of GA criticism, also forthcoming. With Kim Paffenroth of Iona College, Bertonneau has written The Truth is Out There: Christian Faith and the Classics of TV Science Fiction, published in June 2006 by Brazos Press and available for purchase at Amazon.com. New among Bertonneau's affiliations is his election to the editorial board of Pashuhesh-e Zabanha-ye Khareji (Research in Foreign Languages), a Persian-language quarterly published from the University of Tehran that annually issues an English-language or French-language special number.
